2022

Introduction

Foreword from Kipp Bodnar, CMO of HubSpot

The past few years have seen major changes in the way people communicate, shop, market, and sell.

Currently, my Twitter profile picture is an NFT. We have an exciting new podcast, Marketing Against the Grain, that's part of the HubSpot Podcast Network and our new Creators community, and I'm learning about Web3. These are all things that have emerged or exploded in the past year or so, and at HubSpot — we're all in on the future of marketing.

As we do every year, we collected data on all things marketing in 2022. We found that creators are dominating as an engaging, specialized channel to connect with niche audiences, short-form video continues to boom, and marketers are getting more efficient with their workflows and processes. Take a look at the insights and takeaways to learn how to market your business, connect with the right people, grow your audience, and cater to today's buyer.

Thanks for being part of the HubSpot community. We can't wait to see what's in store for marketing and the creator economy.

Chief Marketing Officer

What does marketing look like in 2022?

In 2022, as marketers meet audiences where they are, they are increasingly on the pages of individual creators. TikTok influencers, Reels creators, and YouTube personalities are dominating digital engagement, creating and producing consistent, high-quality content that rivals major brands.

We collected data from 1,600+ B2B and B2C marketers around the world and across industries to find out:

- Which channels marketers are using
- The most effective marketing strategies
- Emerging trends in marketing
- Channels that are no longer as effective or worthy of investing new resources
- How to connect with consumers

The data revealed that influencer marketing will continue to rise, marketers should invest in short-form video, and content audits should be part of every marketing org's strategy. And marketers are working smarter, not harder. Templates are one of the most popular and effective tools for fast-paced marketing teams. Finally — as expected during a time of environmental, social, economic, and political challenges — marketers need to be ready to pivot, and being flexible pays off.

Here's a preview of some of the major findings from the report — read on for more:

Short-form video content like TikToks and Instagram Reels are the most effective type of social media content

Videos are the top content marketing media format for the third year in a row

Social media is the #1 marketing channel in 2022

Instagram, YouTube, and Facebook are the top 3 social media platforms marketers are using in 2022

83% of marketers believe it's more effective to create higher quality content less often

Facebook has the best ROI for social media ads versus other platforms

Let's explore the digital marketing trends and data for 2022.

Emerging Trends in Marketing + Marketing Benchmarks

New + Emerging Marketing Trends

Social media marketing is going nowhere but up, and the more innovative and creative, the more likely a post is to start a trend or go viral. In 2021, social media was the top marketing channel, and in 2022, it held strong. More and more, the creator economy and niche content are dominating — the top trend marketers are leveraging in 2022 is influencer marketing (this makes sense, the global influencer marketing industry is predicted to surpass $16B in 2022). This year, companies are also investing more in short-form video content and refining their mobile marketing strategy.

Top 5 Marketing Trends in 2022:

What trends are you currently leveraging?

KEY FINDINGS

Influencer marketing is the #1 emerging marketing trend in 2022

20% of marketers are investing in Twitter Spaces

The top source of website traffic is direct — showing the importance of brand awareness

While Clubhouse was hugely popular early in 2021, some of the excitement has worn off in favor of other video and audio platforms and features. Marketers are now more interested in investing in Twitter Spaces, (although TBD on what will be happening at Twitter now that Elon Musk is interested in buying it), YouTube Shorts, and Instagram Live Rooms, among others.

Short-form videos are both the most-used format on social media and the most engaging (we'll dive deeper in the social media chapter), which aligns with emerging investments and a mobile-first audience.

Marketing Benchmarks for 2022

To start, it's important to note that no matter what these benchmarks say, the most important metrics for your business's success are your own. Once you've created and launched your marketing campaigns, website, emails, social media posts, and events, you can continuously test and optimize your marketing strategy based on how your audience responds.

It is helpful to understand where to start. Developing on-brand marketing campaigns takes time, effort, and budget. Should your team put the majority of your efforts into email? Video? Podcasting? TikTok? Here are the channels marketers from B2B and B2C brands are using in 2022.

Top Marketing Channels in 2022

Social media is the top channel for marketers in 2022. Interestingly, influencer marketing is more popular than SEO, showing a rise in interest in the creator economy, and hinting that it may be wise to invest in creator partnerships and programs in your community.

Where are people spending their time online and engaging? And how?

While people have their own preferences when it comes to researching their favorite brands and gathering information online, social media continues to be a common path for building relationships with companies. Additionally, direct and organic inquiries on search engines and the associated keywords are critically important for online visibility. Keep in mind — all web content should be responsive and optimized for mobile, desktop, and tablet views.

Now that you've learned about some of the top opportunities to reach new audiences, find out which marketing challenges you or your industry could be facing.

Almost half (48%) of marketing teams expect their budget to increase in 2022, up from last year. With more budget, more campaigns and a wider reach are possible, giving teams more creative freedom to test new channels.

This year, the most effective channels for acquiring new customers are social media (sensing a trend here? It's also the best source for high-quality leads), SEO, and events.

Content Marketing Trends

KEY FINDINGS

Video is the top media format marketers use

Short-form video platforms like TikTok and Instagram Reels are growing the fastest

The most effective content is funny and interactive

Content marketing is a top priority for marketing teams, encompassing multimedia formats and becoming more interactive and accessible in recent years. This year, video is the top media format (for the third year in a row) – but specifically, short-form video platforms like TikTok and Instagram Reels are growing the fastest. While marketers are most likely to use content that matches their brand identity or industry, the most effective posts are 1) funny and 2) interactive.

Brands will continue to show up and be authentic in their marketing, highlighting user-generated content and employee-generated content to showcase the voices of their organization.

How Marketers Measure the Impact of Social Media

Marketers are increasing investments in interactive content, taking the time to design quizzes, engage on social media, and collect valuable information from their audience. They are also sharing more “behind the scenes” content and authentic brand stories, which resonate during a time when community comes first.

Content Marketing Trends to Watch in 2022

The Latest Content Trends with Rock Content

The last couple of years were extremely interesting, and important, for any digital marketer. The broad and unchecked access to customer data, one of the main pillars of digital marketing, is being heavily criticized and the landscape is quickly changing.

There's a good reason behind that. The amount of data we are collecting became a major privacy issue, and governments are not happy about it. To avoid problems, the big players are acting proactively, and a lot has changed recently: iOS14 changed the way data is collected, multiple smaller browsers have killed the 3rd party cookie and soon Chrome will do the same, GDPR and other similar laws are becoming stricter every day.

And believe me, it won't stop there. Access to data will become harder and harder.

The Times, They Are A-Changin'

All of that means that investing in tactics that rely on aggregate data is becoming more expensive, and relying only on extremely optimized last-touch advertising will no longer be a viable strategy.

But let's be honest: just operating tools to maximize CPC isn't actually marketing. There's no long-term brand building, product positioning, and all the basics of actual marketing.

Even though these changes appear to be negative at first, they are actually a big opportunity!

Tides of Change Bring Big Opportunities

Advertisers are learning the importance of creating an online presence that covers the entire customer journey, guiding and delighting their audiences.

This is a powerful way not only to generate a positive brand perception and increase awareness, but it's also the best strategy to collect first-party data, which is becoming essential for any future-proof marketing strategy.

The best, maybe only, way to create this future-proof marketing is by creating a really good online presence with amazing content and a well-structured, privacy-oriented, data collection strategy.

That's great news for content marketers everywhere, but we also need to adapt, so let's understand what that means in the short and long term.

If your strategy still doesn't include the creation of an owned channel with great content, that's the obvious first step. Having your own blog, podcast, or newsletter is no longer optional if you want to cover the entire customer journey. You can't simply rely exclusively on building on "rented land" - PPC or Social Media - because that means that you'll be hostage to an algorithm that could change at any time.

Even if you already have a strong content marketing strategy in place, with your own channels, it's time to start thinking about adapting your distribution. SEO is a great example: it will still be a very important acquisition channel for a while, but it's not wise to put all of your eggs in that basket anymore. Zero-click searches are always increasing and, just like with social media, you are hostage to an ever-changing algorithm.

The question marketers should ask themselves for the future is: how can I create an audience that I can reach whenever I want without depending on any distribution channel that I don't have control over?

The Answer? Think Like a Publisher!

A publisher needs to create amazing content frequently to have a recurring audience that chooses to pay attention to what you are saying because it resonates with them. These are your newsletter or podcast subscribers, the frequent readers of your blog that keep it in their bookmarks instead of finding you on Google, etc.

Each person that chooses to actively go after your content, your brand, is worth a hundred times more than a single Instagram follower or someone who just found your blog on Google and never returns. Rand Fishkin calls it the “Netflix Effect” and I believe it’s a good definition. When someone is eager for your content to reach their inbox, you win.

Don’t get me wrong. That doesn’t mean at all that we should stop investing in SEO, social media, or PPC. These are great channels for our audience to find us, but we must create a journey that turns these one-time visitors into fans of our content and our brand.

The second most important action that digital marketers should take, right after creating the journey, is to have it attached to a strong first-party data collection structure, something that’s commonly not prioritized by content marketers.

If you follow privacy best practices and laws like the GDPR, it’s safe to say that your first-party data collection strategy won’t be drastically affected by privacy-oriented changes that are rolled out by platforms or the government.

“We must create a journey that turns these one-time visitors into fans of our content and our brand”

VITOR PEÇANHA

CMO + Co-Founder, Rock Content

Collecting first-party data has always been important to a proper content marketing strategy, after all, that’s the essence of marketing automation: collecting relevant data about your audience to segment them, deliver customized content, and, of course, identify the leads that are a good fit to become customers. But now it’s becoming even more important.

Without access to the same amount of data as before, PPC is becoming less efficient, and that’s where the customer journey and first-party data come in. You can input this data on your ad platforms to compensate for some of the third-party data that’s no longer available, increasing efficiency, for example.

But also, if you create a proper data collection strategy, you can qualify your audience and create the best content for them, and move them through the journey by educating and entertaining. That’s what content marketing is all about!

Focus Your Content Efforts in 2022

It's no coincidence that Interactive Content is at the top of the Content Marketing trends to watch in 2022. One reason is that the audience is no longer satisfied with static content like white papers and ebooks, and marketers need to differentiate themselves to stand out. But another very important reason is that interactive content is an amazing way to collect rich first-party data.

At Rock Content we use it all the time. Whenever a lead interacts with a content budget calculator, for example, they're providing us valuable insights about their content marketing strategy and this is gold for lead qualification and our sales conversations. This is the level of information that is really hard to get only with forms because it depends on the interactivity and a richer and more valuable experience for the lead.

If you want to future-proof your marketing you should focus on two things: creating an incredible online presence that focuses on creating your own audience and connecting it to a robust first-party data collection structure.

This is what needs to be done now because it's already the reality of the digital marketing landscape but also won't change anytime soon, especially if you have the right mentality and focus on generating value for your audience above everything else.

Social Media Marketing Trends

KEY FINDINGS

Instagram, YouTube, and Facebook are the top 3 social media platforms

The #1 social media-related challenge for marketers is creating engaging content

Marketers are investing the most in live streaming and short-form video content

Social media evolves each year, along with the technology that supports it and the users who contribute to each platform. In the past, social media was a place for socialization, education, and community. It's still all of those things, but now, social media platforms represent an opportunity to share important information and messages, and to educate and inspire.

In 2022, social media teams will continue to build their brands on Instagram, YouTube, and TikTok, with the most investments going towards these three sites. Brands are building out their live streaming and short-form video strategies, and taking advantage of new features released by the social platforms themselves.

Last year, YouTube was the 4th most popular platform, and it's now #2. With advancements in AI-powered voice transcription and new accessibility options for video content, the frontier of video SEO has barely been explored. Our advice — start practicing your video recording and editing skills, and see how you can scale up your YouTube marketing strategy now. Grab the ultimate guide to YouTube marketing here.

When it comes to ROI, Facebook continues to dominate, proving the best value for marketers across B2B and B2C organizations, but lacking in engagement and promise for the future.

Social media marketing teams are facing continued challenges keeping up with the demands to create, produce, and publish high-quality content, as well as reaching audiences, engaging with them, and coming up with new ideas. Dive through the latest social media data and insights to see how you can update your social media planning strategy to grow audiences this year.

This year, video content in any form is engaging audiences. For social media outcomes, marketers are prioritizing brand awareness, building new audiences, and improving customer service and retention more so than in 2021. Brands are putting their relationships and audience community ahead of sales, and working to build deeper relationships with loyal customers while building engagement online.

"From the addition of Reels into Facebook, to the rise of YouTube Shorts, and TikTok overtaking Google as the most popular domain, the great shift to short form video is in full-swing. The platforms are increasingly placing priority on highlighting short form video in their algorithms, and if you aren't already exploring the use of this medium, now is the time to start. TikTok has the biggest viral advantage for native content and the good news is that tapping into it doesn't have to cost a lot of money, just a bit of creativity."

Short-form video is here to stay

Short-form video is the most engaging content type, and it has the highest ROI compared to any other content format. Businesses are using TikTok, Instagram Reels, and YouTube Shorts to educate, inform, inspire, show off company culture, and entertain.

Think about using short-form video in conjunction with influencer marketing, creator programs, UGC and EGC, and company culture and hiring initiatives.

How HubSpot Users Do Social Media Marketing

When compared to marketers who use different tools for social media management, HubSpot social media users:

- Are more likely to say social media marketing has been “very effective” this year
- Are more likely to work with influencers, buy paid ads, repurpose content, search for new social media platforms, use social media for customer service, and invest in social media communities
- More often have a documented social media strategy and posting schedule

Email Marketing Trends

KEY FINDINGS

Most people open email on mobile or desktop, but tablets are on the rise

95% of marketers felt that email marketing efforts were effective in meeting business goals

Gmail is the most popular email client

Email marketing is an important part of every marketing team's tech stack. 95% of marketers found that their email marketing strategy was effective in meeting business goals in 2021, and B2C brands are more likely to find email marketing to be impactful.

Some of the best email strategies for reaching marketing goals include email personalization (the most effective strategy for surveyed marketers), writing effective subject lines, and making emails mobile-friendly.

In 2022, companies are using email to:

- 1 Improve customer loyalty and retention
- 2 Increase revenue/sales
- 3 Generate leads
- 4 Generate website traffic
- 5 Increase brand awareness

Marketing, sales, and service teams love using email, and audiences agree.

The Latest Email Marketing Trends with Litmus

There's a simple reason so many marketers rely on email: it works. It's cost-effective for any size business, increases engagement, conversions—and revenue. Litmus research shows that email delivers a \$36 return for every $1 spent.

And according to email professionals surveyed for Litmus' 2021 State of Email Report, 79% of marketers ranked email in their top three channels for effectiveness. Email's low cost and high visibility make it essential for marketing success.

Top marketing channels by effectiveness

It also offers the unique ability to tap into key audiences, who have essentially raised their virtual hands asking for more communication from a brand. With every interaction, email subscribers provide marketers with valuable insights that can help inform new ways to develop relationships, drive results, and fine-tune a customer-centric approach.

Getting the most out of email marketing

Email continues its reign because it's one of the rare channels marketers can (and should) use to form a direct customer connection. Email is the first place to measure if an audience is engaging, and offers multiple opportunities for meaningful engagement.

Here are the top four areas marketers should focus on to build and refine an email marketing program that performs—and keeps people coming back for more.

Understand your data

Email can provide access to zero and first-party data, which is increasingly important with the nearing end of third-party cookies in 2023. Tools like email preference centers can be used to better understand subscribers' interests, and provide the data and insights email marketers need to send relevant and customized email content.

Taking the time to understand and address email subscribers through segmentation, and eventually, personalization, makes them feel valued. At the same time, it empowers brands to learn more about customers and prospects in every interaction.

	Definition	Examples
Zero-party data	Individual-level data explicitly given to you directly from your audience	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Email preferences• Topic or product interests• Account preferences
First-party data	Individual-level data collected from your audience on your own channels	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Email engagement• Website activity• Purchase history
Second-party data	Individual-level data acquired from a trusted partner aka someone else's first-party data	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Co-marketing efforts• Customer reviews• Loyalty programs
Third-party data	Aggregate data collected from one or more sources	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Browsing activity (via cookies)• Demographics• Survey responses

Using data to inform email strategy doesn't have to be intimidating; simplicity still makes an impact. Start with the basics by digging into your analytics tools and consider how you can apply what you know about your audience to tailor messages that appeal to your readers.

Account for Apple's Mail Privacy Protection (MPP)

Email open rates have long been used as a core benchmark of email marketing success. Although many in the email marketing community would argue that open rates are merely a vanity metric, they are still commonly used as a measuring stick. But open rates have become more complex to accurately interpret since Apple's Mail Privacy Protection \(MPP\) launched in September 2021.

Why? Apple positions Mail Privacy Protection (MPP) as a feature intended to give users who opt into it more control and privacy—and it is. But it also masks information that was once available to email marketers. For example, MPP hides the IP address and blocks visibility into whether the email was opened and how many times, for those who've opted into it. Because of this, traditional metrics like open rates may not be as reliable as they once were.

Keep in mind, Apple's Mail Privacy Protection (MPP) affects any email opened from the Apple Mail app on any device—no matter which email service is used (like Gmail or a work account).

It doesn't affect other email apps used on Apple devices—like the Gmail app used on an iPhone.

While the impact MPP has on a given email marketing program depends on how much of the subscriber audience has opted into MPP, Litmus' email client market share data indicates that the number of MPP impacted opens has exceeded 50%.

Top 10 email clients overall

Source: Litmus May 2022 Email Client Market Share

If you have more questions about MPP, we have answers. Our MPP 5 Step Response Guide will get you up to speed with tactical steps to take action.

Define the Metrics that Matter

Now that MPP has been in the market for more than nine months, marketers have to dig deeper to ensure they're using accurate and meaningful indicators of campaign performance.

Brands historically have relied on open rates to track email success, followed by clicks and bounces. However, there's tremendous value in the metrics that have been largely overlooked such as ROI, measured by less than a fifth of email marketers according to our State of Email Analytics Report.

If you're not using these, consider incorporating them into your campaign measurement. And if you are relying heavily on open rates, start thinking about alternative metrics to tell the full story based on your goals.

For example, where MPP is a concern, programs that rely on open rates as a trigger—like re-engagement campaigns and automated nurture flows—may need to be seen through a new lens.

Email metrics tracked

Nearly half of brands don't track email interactions down to conversions. Fewer than a fifth measure their email marketing ROI. And just 12% of brands measure subscriber lifetime value, which many consider to be the king of North Star metrics.

For a more holistic view, marketers should focus on the metrics that help them better identify which content resonates, where email creative, copy or send frequency is falling flat, and potential signals to improve the entire customer journey.

Here are the areas to focus your analysis.

Measure the most impactful email campaigns and replicate what works

Monitor optimizations and monitor what drives clicks (and conversions!)

Consider how email influences other marketing channels—and how your email analysis can drive more success

You can find more metrics to consider and learn how to calculate in our Email Analytics Survival Guide.

Evaluate email engagement

How subscribers are engaging with your messages extends well beyond if they opened your message or clicked on a call-to-action (CTA). Understanding which devices and apps your audience uses lets you know how they'll likely view your message, and how you can use that insight to influence engagement.

Knowing where your audience is and how they are receiving your messages by using a defined QA process, like Litmus email testing tools, helps you refine your targeting, email workflows, accuracy, and confidence that your message will arrive in the inbox as you intend.

For example, while every email audience is different, considering your audience breakdown when designing your email campaigns can boost engagement and appeal to more subscribers. Taking time to analyze what devices audiences are using, reading environments messages are being read, email clients used, and trends like Dark Mode helps you deliver an ideal brand experience with every open.

Here are some key ways to start evaluating audience engagement:

- 1. Look at the most popular email clients used by your subscribers. Analyze the differences in key audiences and test ways you can improve the email experience.
- 2. Evaluate how much of your audience is impacted by MPP. Pay particular attention to:
 - % of audience using Apple devices
 - Mobile vs. desktop breakdown
 - % of audience using Apple Dark Mode
 - % on older versions of iOS
 - Read time differences between Apple devices and other devices
- 3. Monitor trends in devices and reading environments. Design your emails in mind for optimal usage. Test to make sure your email will render correctly across devices and environments.
- 4. Determine what percentage of your audience is using Dark Mode. Account for this in your email designs where appropriate to ensure every email you send looks great.

To learn more about how to maximize email engagement, check out our State of Email Engagement Report.

Email offers a direct connection to the customer and a wealth of analytics that can (and should be) used to inform strategic marketing decisions, and improve campaign success. Better still, it works just about anywhere in the customer funnel to complement omnichannel marketing efforts.

Understanding what the ideal customer wants can influence adjustments to a brand's go-to-market strategy, desired communication frequency, and product and promotion rollouts—all contributing to long-lasting customer loyalty.

Facebook and Instagram have the best ROI compared to other social channels

Advertising is a natural complement to marketing campaigns and helps brands reach more interested customers. In 2022, 80% of brands use paid social media advertising, and Facebook and YouTube are the most popular places for companies to spend their advertising budget.

This year, at HubSpot, we launched our first global television campaign, featuring actress and comedian Kathryn Hahn as the leader of Pirates, Inc. This campaign was a new direction for our advertising team, which previously focused on social media, search advertising, and other digital channels. "We know based on research from Kantar and Nielsen that in order to effectively build awareness for your brand, you need to take a multi-channel, surround sound approach. Our media plan was designed to reach our target audience at multiple touchpoints throughout their day and included channels like out-of-home, print, audio, and streaming video. Measuring the success of these channels can be more difficult than digital and is largely done through surveys with control and exposed cohorts to understand the incremental lift that the ads are driving in terms of awareness, consideration, and sentiment."

Brands are still seeing the best direct ROI from ads on Facebook, Instagram, and YouTube, and a rising number of companies are investing in paid campaigns on TikTok, Tumblr, Reddit, Twitch, and Pinterest. YouTube is the most popular channel for video content

Short-form video has the best ROI compared to other video formats

We've been going on about the effectiveness of video marketing content and how brands are investing more in short-form video on TikTok and YouTube than other areas for 2022. And yet, only 6 in 10 marketers claim to be using video in content marketing. This is a big opportunity — for brands using video in other business areas, like case studies or social media — to experiment with repurposing content for new channels, or use video in other departments. For those not using video content at all, grab a smartphone or some free B-roll online and join the 35% of marketers who plan to use video marketing for the first time this year.

Based on the audience of marketers we surveyed, video is far and away the most effective media format, with 76% of respondents agreeing that video helps them reach their goals more than other media types.

Most popular channels for video content

- 1 YouTube
- 2 Facebook
- 3 Instagram
- 4 Twitter
- 5 LinkedIn

Most important metrics to measure video effectiveness:

- 1 View count
- 2 Likes/comments
- 3 Lead generation
- 4 Subscribe/follow rate
- 5 Social sharing
- 6 Click-through rate
- 7 Purchase conversion rate
- 8 Watch time/drop-off rate

Video Marketing by the Numbers

- Short-form video has the best ROI compared to all other media formats
- 1 in 3 marketers plan to invest the most in video marketing in 2022
- 30% of marketers plan to use YouTube for the first time in 2022
- 24% of marketers plan to use TikTok for the first time in 2022
- 37% of marketers plan to increase their investment in live video in 2022
- 29% of marketers plan to increase their investment in long-form video content in 2022
- 51% of marketers plan to increase their investment in short-form video content in 2022
- More than half of marketers (53%) optimize photos or videos for visual search engines, and 49% of marketers find it to be one of their most effective strategies

“Video is one of the most effective ways to reach your audience right now. As a brand, if you’re not creating dynamic video content that resonates with your audience, you’re missing out. Consumers are using video as a primary source of entertainment, education and inspiration. We’ve seen a huge shift in how users use video platforms with YouTube and TikTok acting as not only video consumption destinations, but major search engines as well. As social media apps continue to prioritize videos over static images, the brands that create relatable videos and connect with their audience will ultimately win.”

The Latest Video Marketing Trends with Wistia

The global pandemic upended many industries across the world. In our case, it caused a dramatic increase in video creation and consumption. As we followed video data trends in 2021 and into the first quarter of 2022, it's clear that video creation and consumption are at an all-time high with no signs of slowing down. Consumers are embracing video content more than ever, and businesses are investing more in video this year to keep up with the high demand.

The Demand for Video Reached New Heights in 2021

2021 was a record year for video consumption. The Wistia platform saw nearly 4.7 billion video plays last year. That's a 5% increase from the previous all-time high in 2020, and a jaw-dropping 77% more than 2019. The amount of video plays remained high through the first quarter of 2022. This indicates that video is becoming the preferred way for consumers to engage with brands.

Not only were consumers hitting the play button more, but they also spent way more time watching videos. We clocked 14.6 billion minutes of video watched in 2021. That's up 20% from the 12.2 billion minutes watched the previous year, and up 121% from 2019. Video uploads stayed roughly the same year-over-year—16.4 million last year versus 17.1 million in 2020—but it looks like time spent with video is only continuing to trend upward.

So what videos did businesses make to meet this wild uptick in demand? In general, short-form videos that lasted less than a minute. Out of the nearly 16.4 million videos uploaded to Wistia in 2021, 5.3 million—almost a third!—were short-form videos. Businesses were still uploading a great deal of short-form videos to our platform through the first quarter of 2022. This isn't surprising, considering that short-form videos consistently receive the highest average engagement at around 50%, and have been the most popular video length to create since 2016.

Businesses weren't only making short-form videos, though. 2021 brought a significant rise in the production of long-form content, or videos that lasted over 30 minutes. In fact, long-form content is the fastest growing category of video. Uploads for videos between 30 and 60 minutes have nearly tripled since 2019, reaching 974,417 last year. Uploads for videos over 60 minutes passed the one million mark, representing a 43% increase year-over-year and a nearly 4x jump from 2019 numbers.

VIDEO LENGTH	2019	2020	2021
<1 Minute	2,955,356	4,971,400	5,346,279
1-2 Minutes	1,164,203	2,074,353	1,657,371
3-5 Minutes	657,755	1,201,624	1,080,757
5-30 Minutes	1,671,608	3,339,146	3,324,278
30-60 Minutes	333,191	831,042	974,417
60+ Minutes	267,192	729,207	1,045,520

58.6% of the businesses we surveyed said that they made long-form videos last year. They also told us that out of these videos, webinars received the most engagement from viewers. This suggests that businesses are leaning into formats like webinars, fireside chats, and virtual events that require less editing, and that viewers are willing to engage with these types of content.

Marketers Are Ramping Up Their Video Efforts in 2022

2022 is already shaping up to be another big year for video. Video uploads in the first quarter of 2022 are down slightly year-over-year, but they're still well above 2020 levels. Marketers are just finding out how much video content drives brand engagement, so they're stepping up their game.

The businesses we surveyed revealed some big plans for 2022. More than a third of them planned to increase their video marketing budgets by more than 10% this year. A whopping 72.4% wanted to branch out and create new types of videos, including original branded series, new product videos and demos, and case study videos.

The most common video marketing goals brands hope to achieve this year are: driving brand awareness, educating consumers about their products, increasing customer engagement, and generating leads. This indicates that brands are seeing video impact at every stage of their customers' journey.

What are your main goals with video?

Creating a Winning Video Marketing Strategy in 2022

Video remains an essential tool for marketers. It's a great way to support many different parts of your marketing efforts, so when you invest in video, you're strengthening your entire marketing strategy.

This year, we encourage you to focus on proven formats with high engagement, like creating super short videos for social media, experimenting with longer-form content, and hosting live events like webinars. Influencer Marketing Trends

88% of brands have a dedicated influencer marketing budget

Most brands spend between $50K - $500K on influencer marketing per year

The main goal for influencer marketing in 2022 is increasing brand awareness

In 2022, 68% of marketers work with influencers, and 88% have a dedicated influencer marketing budget — most brands spending between $50K - $500K+ on influencer marketing annually. But influencer marketing has evolved since the early days of celebrity-brand partnerships like Jennifer Aniston and Smart Water.

Now, influencers represent all creators who have engaged audiences, and more and more, these creators are aligning themselves with brands they trust as partners. We launched our new HubSpot Creators program this year, an accelerator program to support creators that helps them amplify their message, get rewarded, and reach more folks. It's also a place for creators to connect with each other and grow their platform.

In 2022, the main goals for influencer marketing are:

- 1 Increasing brand awareness + reaching new audiences
- 2 Improving brand reputation
- 3 Growing your brand community and social media following
- 4 Increasing revenue and sales
- 5 Increasing customer loyalty

Influencer marketing is changing rapidly, even since 2021. This year, marketers are increasing influencer marketing efforts on Facebook, Instagram, TikTok, and YouTube, and decreasing investment on Snapchat and Twitch. Marketers are facing challenges measuring ROI of campaigns, balancing the cost of working with influencers, developing a creative strategy for campaigns, and maintaining brand safety. With continued investment in influencer marketing, brands will lean on new influencer apps and communities, better tracking and strategy, and more frequent campaigns with quick analysis and optimization.

B2B and B2C Marketing Trends.

KEY FINDINGS

B2B and B2C brands are both finding success on TikTok

B2B brands are more likely to use LinkedIn and find it effective, but B2C brands are more likely to feel that billboards and physical ads are more successful

B2C marketers are more likely to expect their marketing budget to increase in 2022

B2B and B2C brands share many of the same marketing strategies. And more and more, B2B brands are adopting the traditionally more consumer-facing strategies like influencer marketing, ambassador communities, and social media marketing.

While there are many similarities, there are also major differences. B2B marketing teams tend to work closely with sales, RevOps, and other go-to-market (GTM) teams to support the customer experience. B2C marketers work closely with PR, brand, and digital sales teams to support sales, customer support, and brand image.

In 2022, B2C brands are more likely to actively run marketing campaigns than B2B brands, but B2B isn't close behind.

Does your company currently run marketing campaigns?

What's working for B2B brands vs. What's working for B2C brands

B2B

B2B brands find inbound marketing + SEO to be more effective than B2C brands

B2B brands have seen better ROI from inbound marketing and SEO than B2C brands

B2B brands are more likely to use blogs, case studies, whitepapers, and interviews

B2B marketers find LinkedIn far more effective than B2C marketers

B2B marketers are more likely to prioritize SEO than brand partnership

B2C

B2C brands find voice search optimization, VR/AR, influencer marketing, podcasts, and short-form content to be more effective

B2C brands have found better ROI from short-form content and native advertising

B2C marketers are more likely to expect their marketing budget to increase in 2022 than B2B marketers

B2C brands are more likely to find physical ads like billboards to be effective than B2B brands

B2C brands are more likely to use checklists and podcasts

B2C brands are increasing their investments in Twitch in 2022

B2C marketers are more likely to use brand partnerships over SEO

Future Marketing Predictions

1 More B2B brands on TikTok

B2B marketers actually see higher engagement and better ROI on TikTok than marketers for B2C brands. And 58% of B2B marketers plan on increasing their investment in TikTok in 2022 vs. 49% of B2C brands.

Expect more tech companies and B2B platforms to invest in TikTok, developing expert brand personas on video channels, and providing actionable tips in a digestible format for today's audience preferences.

“Research shows that B2B clients find co-branded or sponsored 3rd-party content more trustworthy than content straight from a vendor, so more and more B2Bs are investing in robust influencer strategies.

Not only is TikTok a way for B2Bs to reach new customers, but it also represents a big opportunity for agencies who can offer the tools, services, and training needed to win on that platform, since 60% of enterprise companies surveyed still don't feel they have those abilities in-house.”

2

Rising B2C investment in SEO, content marketing, and podcasting

More B2C marketers report that their websites are effective tools for hitting business goals than B2B marketers, and B2B marketers are obsessed with their web presence. B2C teams have an easier time tracking marketing activities to sales, particularly ecommerce companies. 77% of B2C marketers report using SEO versus 66% of B2B marketers, and B2C brands are seeing success with SEO tactics like pillar pages, optimizing page load speed, and using topic clusters more so than B2B brands. We expect to see more advanced SEO and marketing from B2C and DTC brands, along with continued optimization on the B2B side.

AI and machine learning in marketing

Artificial intelligence \(AI\) and machine learning (ML) sound intimidating, but in reality, you are probably already using an AI or ML app without even realizing it. AI and machine learning can be used to clean data, optimize content, improve SEO, and more — saving marketing teams time and money. In 2022, 17% of marketers are integrating automation or artificial intelligence like chatbots and AI-powered segmentation into their strategy, with particular interest in the U.S. and Australia. 43% of marketers agree that automation and AI have been the most effective trends for their organization's growth. This is likely to rise significantly over the next year.

Automation and growing investment in marketing and revenue operations

In our recent State of Media & Content Planning Report, we learned that 78% of media planners use automation. HubSpot's extensive app library, with thousands of integrations that work seamlessly with HubSpot data, and tools like Zapier have empowered marketers to automate key aspects of their role, saving them manual time and helping to improve the customer experience and business performance.

Marketers will find new and creative ways to use automation in their day-to-day roles and for the larger marketing organization. There will also be a continued need for revenue operations (RevOps), as the market is turbulent, and companies need to be prepared to pivot their strategy and operate as lean as they can.

The short-form video boom will continue, and lead to more short-form video ads

95% of marketers currently using short-form video plan to increase their engagement or carry on with existing investments in 2022, and short-form video has proven to be the most effective media format for marketers. As marketers refine their organic short-form video strategy after analyzing and optimizing for several years at this point, they will move into more strategic short-form video ads on platforms like TikTok, Instagram Reels, Tumblr, YouTube, and Pinterest.

Influencer marketing will grow and evolve, with continued growth in the creator economy

At HubSpot, we want to support creators however we can. Through the new HubSpot Creators program, podcasts in the HubSpot Podcast Network grew 76% on average. HubSpot podcasts are far more likely to be found and to increase their listenership, thanks to this innovative program and how we're able to use our own audience to increase our creators' visibility.

Conclusion + Methodology

The future of marketing is bright, and powered by creatives

This year, look at your marketing plan holistically and be ready to pivot and test at every turn. More and more, digital audiences are seeking out brands that are authentic, transparent, and innovative. Being creative and taking risks will pay off, so don't be too blinded by metrics and tracking to experiment with new channels or media formats.

We can't wait to see what you create.
