How does HubSpot obtain the customer data used in this report?
We collect data as customers interact with us via our websites or use HubSpot’s subscription services. What we collect, how we use the information we collect, how we share that information, and how customers can manage their information are all described in our Privacy Policy.

What types of customer data are used in this report?
The data presented in this report falls into two categories:
1. Personal Data (as defined in our Customer Data Processing Agreement); and
2. usage data.

We collect Personal Data from customers when they submit web forms or interact with our websites, for example subscribing to a HubSpot blog, signing up for a webinar, or requesting customer support. We also collect Personal Data when customers sign up for a HubSpot account, create or modify user information, set preferences, or provide any other related information to access or utilize our Subscription Service.

Usage data includes metrics and information regarding customers’ use and interaction with the Subscription Service such as what product features they use the most, when an object (like a deal) is created and closed, and how often certain features (like workflows) are triggered in their account.

How does HubSpot maintain customer data privacy?
To ensure we maintain the privacy of our customers’ data, we use anonymization to remove or modify personally identifiable information, so that data cannot be associated with any one individual. We employ three standard anonymization techniques to customer outcomes data: attribute suppression, generalization and aggregation. We also withhold from sharing aggregated data from customer cohorts with sample sizes that do not reach an established cohort size threshold of 100.
Data Methodology (continued)

Which customers are included in the data presented in this report?
The data presented in this report is based on aggregated data from thousands of HubSpot customers. Exact sample sizes and information about the criteria customers met to be included in the analysis for each chart or statistic can be found in the chart description.

How are performance since purchase statistics calculated?
The average improvement for each metric reflects customer performance in that month post-purchase compared to the average set in either the first month or first three months after purchasing HubSpot.

How do I interpret the performance since purchase statistics?
If a metric shows a 10% improvement, that means it’s 10% higher than its benchmark. For example, if a customer has 100 visitors per month in month 1 and the 12 month improvement in that metric is 50%, the customer would see 150 visitors per month in month 12.

How does HubSpot ensure the data presented in this report is accurate?
We believe it is critically important to ensure the average improvement values reported in this report reflect the experience of our customers as accurately as possible. Therefore, before analyzing customer’s data, we screen the data to check for errors, missing data and data distribution. We also employ statistical techniques to identify outliers and clean data so that unusual values do not distort monthly averages. In the case of highly skewed distributions, we use the median value as opposed to the mean because medians are found to be the best measure of central tendency in the case of skewed data.

Are customers guaranteed to see the same results presented in this report?
The short answer is: no. The data included in this report is based on aggregated data from 158,000+ HubSpot customers globally. It is provided for information purposes only. Please keep in mind that results for individual businesses, including your’s and HubSpot’s, may differ based on your own markets, customer base, industry, geography, stage, and/or other factors.
